GABE PALMER/THE STOCK MARKET

THE LAST DAYS OF SUMMER ARE precious: a time when those beach trips, barbecues, and semi-lazy afternoons in the shade seem short-lived. With school lurking right around the corner, every no-pressure moment seems special. And it is. Because soon, that onerous routine returns: making lunches, doing homework, driving carpools, setting that alarm clock every night.

This issue of "Families" is designed to help you make the transition from Summer to Fall. First we'll look at tough transitions—those periods in your children's school careers that prove difficult times, academically and developmentally, for kids and parents. Then learn what adults need to know about their own health—rolling up their sleeves and taking advantage of vaccinations that can prevent annoying, time-stealing illnesses. You'll also discover some terrific end-of-summer excursions (or first field trips) in America's new aquariums. We have some handy tips on how to make your child's school lunches special, plus news of two great new multimedia releases that will turn your kids into intrepid explorers.

From everyone at The Disney Channel Magazine, we wish you good times—and at least one long, lazy afternoon nap—before the summer sets.

School Daze/School Faze TOUGH TRANSITIONS

Despite all the new approaches introduced in education over the last few years, one thing has not changed: the number and nature of certain predictably tough transitions for children and parents.

Education experts say that from kindergarten through high school, there are specific points that are almost universally challenging, both academically and developmentally, for kids and parents.

It helps for parents to know about these points so they can better understand what their children are experiencing, says Jerry Miller, professor of psychology and director of The University Center for the Child and the Family at the University of Michigan, in Ann Arbor.

Despite the widespread participation in preschool programs, most children still find that kindergarten is a difficult transition. "It's usually a much bigger school," Miller says, "and it carries lots of meaning for parents: a sense of passage and loss of those early childhood years."

For some children, kindergarten is academically easy; other children have trouble with such tasks as printing their

6 Tips For Making Lunches Memorable...

HOW CAN YOU TAKE THE SAME old sandwich and fruit and make it into a fun lunch? Here are some things you can add to any lunch box, guaranteed to get a smile:

1. Cut-out a cartoon from the comics.
2. Recycle the small toys given in fast food kids' meals; add one to the lunch box for an unexpected surprise.
3. Add a small rubber ball or a little package of jacks for recess fun.
4. Slip in a sweet note or a word of encouragement.
5. Write a riddle on a note; put the answer on the bottom of the lunch bag.
6. Cut an extra paper napkin in a silly shape.

names or cutting out shapes with scissors. Yet parents shouldn't try to prepare their kids beforehand, just support them throughout the year, says Miller.

The next trouble spot is first grade, which introduces a full school day and the start of harder academic work. "Even for those who have been in day care after kindergarten, first grade will be more demanding," says Miller. "Expect to have a month or two of tired, irritable late afternoons, until the child adjusts." As for academics, there is still a wide range of normal progression in first grade, and parents should talk with the teacher if they see signs of trouble or frustration. Miller also encourages parents to use fun, educational software at home to reinforce the reading and math concepts that children are learning in school.

The next tough transition doesn't come until fourth grade, and here the transition is more academic than developmental. "By now it's essential to have mastered reading, writing, and math basics," Miller points out, "or the child will need additional help."

Fourth grade also marks the point at which students find their place in the social world of school. If children seem unhappy at recess or troubled by their friends, parents should talk with the teacher, says Miller. "Teachers have seen a lot of children, and they can help parents determine if there is an academic or social problem that needs help."

Some experts say the toughest transition of all occurs at the start of middle school—or junior high—when the classic challenges of early adolescence are coupled with the competing demands of

HELPFUL HINTS FOR GETTING BACK INTO YOUR ROUTINE

It's never easy getting the whole family into the back-to-school routine. But organization experts say there are things parents can do to make a smooth transition.

INVOLVE KIDS IN THE PLANNING, says Paulette Ensign, president of the National Association of Professional Organizers. Start talking about the transition a week or two before it hits, and get their ideas about what could make it easier: laying out the next day's clothes every night; packing lunches after dinner; devoting a special folder for homework or notes-from-school folders.

BUY A FEW FUN THINGS. They don't have to be expensive; even a very special pen or a silly eraser can make the loss of summer a bit more upbeat, says Ensign.

TRY COLOR CODING. Make one child's backpack, book covers and lunch box one color, and a sibling's another. Use color-coded crates at the back door to collect each kid's boots or athletic equipment.

USE CHECKLISTS. Robin Maier, mother of four and a clinical social worker and organizational consultant in Tampa, Florida, urges families to make a list of each child's daily required activities, from brushing teeth to getting dressed, having breakfast, making the bed. Maier encourages her kids to get dressed before breakfast, so they know how much time they have to spend munching cereal. Checklists can also list before-bed activities like "put homework in backpack" and "get gym clothes," she says.

a new curriculum with multiple classes. "Parents have to recognize these kids have special needs," says Miller, who advises parents to read books on the middle school child. He also encourages parents to support the school program as much as possible, since middle school students tend to complain about the injustice of school policies, procedures, and even assignments.

Starting high school can send a tough wake-up call to teenagers as they suddenly realize they're at the last level before college and adulthood.

"For years and years kids are told they are preparing for high school, and they feel all the academic pressure combined with the social demands that come with new freedoms: car licenses, parties, even their changing bodies," says Miller. He suggests parents set reasonable standards, talk with other parents for perspective, and support their teens academically and socially as they progress.

At the junior year, Miller says parents should expect yet another transition, as the pre-college preparation heats up and the sense of change looms large. For parents, this is also a time of great transitional stress as they anticipate both an empty nest and the financial demands imposed by college.

Through all the transitions of childhood, Miller recommends that parents take care of themselves—with exercise, activities and fun—so they can have as much energy and enthusiasm as possible.

"You'll need it," Miller says.

Need to Know ROLL UP YOUR OWN SLEEVES

What's considered the largest untapped opportunity for saving lives in America?

Immunizing adults, says Pierce Gardner, M.D., a spokesman for the American College of Physicians.

While most parents are careful to make sure their children get all the recommended vaccinations, they often forget their own needs, Gardner says. As a result, there are about 60,000 deaths a year from influenza, Hepatitis B, and certain strains of pneumonia.

Parents should also evaluate whether other adults active in their family's lives—babysitters and other household workers—are sufficiently immunized, he adds. All adults should maintain a permanent record of their immunizations for easy reference.

Influenza. Anyone who wants to avoid missing time from work or parenting should get an influenza vaccine, says Gardner. It is inexpensive, widely available, and effective 60% of the time, on the average, in completely preventing influenza. Having the vaccine also helps prevent exposing a senior relative or young child to the disease.

MMR. For those born after 1957, a measles, mumps, rubella vaccine could be indicated. Gardner says adults should either get a blood test to check whether antibodies against the diseases are sufficiently present, or just get the vaccine. Those born before 1957 were probably immunized through exposure to the diseases. If you're unsure whether you had the disease or the vaccine, and especially if you are traveling to a third world country, Gardner recommends getting the vaccine.

Tetanus. New research suggests that a single tetanus booster shot in midlife is all the added protection an adult needs, assuming the full round of tetanus immunizations and boosters were given in childhood. Gardner says it is no longer considered necessary to get a tetanus shot every ten years.

Chicken pox. Gardner says that while 75% of the time adults say they never had chicken pox, blood studies reveal they did, but were unaware of it. He recommends that adults who are unsure about having the disease get a blood test and obtain the immunization if they need it.

Hepatitis B. About 200,000 to 300,000 Hepatitis B infections occur annually in the United States, and 5,000 people a year die from the disease. Adults are advised to get the expensive, three-shot vaccine if they are at high risk (work in health care or in a related high-risk occupation). Because the years of maximum risk are considered to be adolescence and the 20s, pediatricians are increasingly immunizing children or those in their early teens.

Hepatitis A. The vaccination is recommended for those traveling to second and third world countries and people who work in labs or in unsanitary conditions, such as sewers. Children—who get two-thirds of the cases recorded in the U.S.—do not get very sick from the disease, but adults do.

Pneumococcal pneumonia. Recommended for all adults 65 and older and individuals with chronic cardiac, pulmonary or kidney disease, and diabetes. The one-time-only vaccine is also recommended for adults who want to avoid the disease. Gardner says prevention has become increasingly important; an increase in drug resistance has made combating the disease with antibiotics more difficult.

HOW WE LEARNED TO LOVE THE CLOCK

FORGET THE CALENDAR. Summer is history—you're setting the alarm for the first day of school. Of course, this is the '90s, so your alarm clock may be voice-activated, waking you with soft music, featuring a dream bar for snoozing, probably finishing the kids' homework. Now for some Alarm Clock History 101. It was in back in 1910 that Westclock patented its Big Ben alarm clock. That first clock was made of metal with a dark face and short legs and didn't change all that much until an ultra-modern look was designed in the '60s. Cost of Westclock's first Big Ben alarm clock?—about two bucks.

Top right: An early Big Ben alarm clock; above: a cool remodel came in the '60s, before we all went digital.

As the echoes of his childish roar fade from the gorge, young Simba realizes that the ground beneath his paws is rumbling ominously. He looks up to behold a spectacle unlike anything he has ever seen: thousands of wildebeests galloping down the gorge toward him. Knowing he will be trampled if the herd overtakes him, Simba turns and flees for his life.

A Brave New Wo

By Charles Solomon

"It took Scott Johnston and a four-person crew two-and-a-half years to create the wildebeest stampede—a two-and-a-half-minute scene."

THE MOST DRAMATIC SEQUENCE IN The Lion King, the wildebeest stampede set a new standard for the undetectable integration of hand-drawn animation and computer-generated imagery (CGI). Never before had viewers seen so many animated characters in motion—or found it so difficult to distinguish between drawn and CGI figures.

“Originally, we had planned to have Simba notice that Mufasa was having a difficult time swimming across a river as his first realization of his father’s mortality,” recalls Lion King co-director Roger Allers. “But it wasn’t really that interesting. As the story got reworked, we added a moment where Simba would be threatened as a cub and Mufasa would save him. We kept the river as a kind of back-up, but when someone came up with the idea of a river of wildebeests, it was really exciting: It was so much like the live-action films we had seen of Africa.”

assembled nobles in Sleeping Beauty. Moving the thousands of animals required for the stampede is an animator’s nightmare.

Allers and co-director Rob Minkoff entrusted the sequence to the film’s CGI supervisor, Scott Johnston, who comments, “Ideally, every character in a crowd should be animated individually, but that’s impractical. Traditional techniques involving the duplication of artwork tend to look flat and repetitive: Our challenge was to make the sequence dynamic and powerful.”

It took Johnston and a four-person crew 2 1/2 years to create the 2 1/2-minute sequence. They began with the animation of a single wildebeest running, drawn by Ruben Aquino, the lead animator on the adult Simba.

“Using documentary footage and hand-drawn artwork as references, we developed a library of basic wildebeest behaviors, including runs, hops, and head tosses,”

World of Animation

The “river of wildebeests” was the annual migration of the large antelope: Up to one million animals move across the plains of East Africa in a vast stream of horns, hooves, and dust.

Because of the amount of work involved, animated crowd scenes usually involve either duplicating artwork to produce synchronized choruses, like the thistle-dancers in the “Nutcracker” sequence of Fantasia, or the minimal animation of lines of background figures, like the Johnston explains. “We enhanced the sense of weight by making the ’beests lean into their turns. We established rules that told groups of wildebeests to follow designated lead ’beests, while avoiding collisions with one another and with obstacles within the scene.

“Compositing simulations on multiple layers allowed us to create shots with as few as three or as many as one thousand wildebeests.

“Seamlessly integrating the stampede into the film was crucial," says Johnston. "Live-action requires photo-realism, while The Lion King demanded cartoon-realism—the wildebeests had to look and act like real cartoon animals. Traditional animation effects enhance the sense of depth in a fundamentally flat environment. CGI visual effects do the opposite: The inherently 3-dimensional CGI must blend into the world of traditional animation. The CGI wildebeests were given inking lines, tones, shadows, and hand-drawn textures for their manes and tails to match the look of the drawn characters."

"A lot of the CGI work had been done on background elements, but it was so divorced from the styling of the rest of the picture that it kind of stuck out," agrees Allers. "Because the computer is able to do three-dimensional objects, it seems crazy to say, 'Now we're going to flatten them out,' but we did so the wildebeests would not look different stylistically from little Simba."

THE RESULT WAS frighteningly effective. Viewers couldn't tell which characters were drawn by hand, which were computer-generated, but they knew Simba risked death beneath the hooves of the wildebeests.

The success of the stampede led directors Kirk Wise and Gary Trousdale to include crowd scenes in The Hunchback of Notre Dame. "We wanted the film to feel like a Hollywood epic. The wildebeest stampede in The Lion King made us realize, 'We can do this.'"

As artists continue to explore the possibilities of combining drawn and CGI elements in their films, audiences can look forward to visuals that will meld the warmth and immediacy of hand-drawn animation with the dramatic cinematography and masses of characters created through CGI.

And thousands of wildebeests led the way, thanks to The Lion King.

WILD

Beginning September 8,

two new wildlife series

bring your family a passport to wild animal adventures

AMAZING ANIMALS

Meet Henry: he's a green and purple gecko—and he and his animated friends are your companions for travels through the world of Amazing Animals.

Amazing Animals starts with stark white backgrounds and then mixes together world-class wildlife photography and fast-paced CD-ROM-like graphics. Throw in Henry and his friends to tell the stories, and you have an innovative nature series unlike anything you've ever seen. But that's what you'd expect from a program created by DK, the publishing company that creates those beautifully illustrated guide books and CD-ROMS for children and adults.

The show uses a unique approach. Take Amazing Animal Disguises. Large mammals (zebras, tigers) have stripes that provide an effective disguise in high grass or forest glades. Insects have disguises: they're camouflaged to resemble leaves or twigs. But did you know that a disguise can be a smell? Facing a predator, the hog-nosed snake writhes around like it's dying and gives off a foul odor—the predator thinks the hog-nosed snake isn't safe to eat. In one show, you not only meet many different species and learn about disguises, you learn about the concept of disguise, too.

ANIMAL ADVENTURES

AUDUBON'S ANIMAL ADVENTURES

Animal lovers will be wild over Audubon's Animal Adventures. Each episode takes you in search of another fascinating animal. You'll get an up-close and personal view of that creature: its friends, its enemies, its unique lifestyle. You'll also meet kids, scientists, and other animal lovers who are out there helping these animals get along in today's world. The series "brings to TV screens the world's rare and precious animals," says producer Katherine Carpenter. "We'll thrill families with wonders of the natural world, and show them the ways people are working to keep our world wild!" Each week you'll encounter a new animal species, from dolphins & eagles to cougars & whales. You'll even meet a man who dances with whooping cranes.

Each of the 13 episodes of Audubon's Animal Adventures introduces you to rare and threatened animals, from sea turtles to wolves.

PATRICK SWAYZE PLAYS PECOS BILL IN TALL TALE

IT WAS KIND OF A NO-BRAINER CASTING PATRICK Swayze as Pecos Bill," says Jeremiah Chechik, the director of Tall Tale. "One cannot learn to play Pecos Bill. Patrick actually personified the Pecos myth." In the film, Pecos Bill and two other American legends—John Henry and Paul Bunyan—team up to help young Daniel Hackett foil the machinations of a ruthless railroad tycoon at a time of great change on the American Frontier. (Scott Glenn plays the dastardly villain.) "Pecos is a character with old-fashioned ideals and integrity and kind of represents the American way of life," Patrick Swayze (himself an enthusiastic horseman) observes of his character. "Pecos absolutely hates the coming of the industrial age because it means machines will be running men's lives, rather than the skills and abilities they've developed with a horse and a rope. Pecos is all about the innocent ideals which have been driven out of us. And, in many ways, he's a kind of surrogate father to young Daniel." Co-starring with Swayze are Roger Aaron Brown as John Henry and Oliver Platt as Paul Bunyan. Playing Daniel Hackett is 15-year-old Nick Stahl, who made his impressive film debut playing opposite Mel Gibson in "The Man Without a Face."

ROTTEN RALPH RETURNS IN A NEW ANIMATED SPECIAL

BACK IN MAY WE INTRODUCED you to a new animated hero: Rotten Ralph. Originally the star of a series of picture books by Jack Gantos and Nicole Rubel, Ralph made his debut in a special that boasted the most sophisticated stop-action animation ever created for television. (Not to mention stunning sets & character design!) Best of all was Ralph himself, a fire-engine-red cat always into mischief, trying the patience but never the love of his warm-hearted owner, young Sarah. Now Ralph returns in Not So Rotten Ralph, in which our hero promises to turn over a new leaf. If he doesn't, it's a kitty obedience school for unruly felines—and Sarah and her parents can see what that's done for Percy, a prissy puss who belongs to Sarah's cousin. Will Ralph reform? Get on the Go with the Goofster

JOIN THE GOOF TROOP ON WEEKDAYS

HE HAS NEVER BEEN A SUPERHERO. IN FACT, GOOFY HAS ALWAYS been himself—much to the consternation of his totally hip offspring Max. While Max can pose as the dazzling suburbanite hipster of the '90s ("Screamin' dude!"), Goofy is dear old Dad, a stumbling dufus who takes delight in discovering the obvious while marching to the beat of his own drummer. (If only others could hear that beat!) In fact, the Goofster has one piece of advice that will help lead anyone through the chaos of daily life: "Just follow yer heart and keep tryin'." Which makes the Goof our animated hero for the '90s. We'll think you agree as Goof Troop comes to The Disney Channel's afternoon lineup beginning September 3. In addition to coping with Max, the Goofster also has to deal with Max's friend P.J.—and P.J.'s dad, Pete. Pete is the total opposite from the Goof: he's a loudmouthed, mean-spirited, used-car salesman. Needless to say, family—neighborly—relations are a lot like they are in real life: totally strange at times but funny. And you know what really embarrasses Max? It's that he's inherited dad's goofy giggle ("hyuck, hyuck"). That's family life in the '90s, Goofy-style.

Wildlife Safaris In East Africa

HUME CRONYN & JESSICA TANDY IN "AN AFRICAN LOVE STORY"

IN 1966, HUME CRONYN AND JESSICA TANDY, the celebrated husband-and-wife acting duo, journeyed to East Africa on an extended wildlife safari, visiting the great game parks of Tsavo and the Masai Mora. Documenting the trip on film for the couple was former game warden and cameraman Simon Trevor (who later worked on Out of Africa and Gorillas in the Mist).
In 1995, interested in and concerned about the threat to East Africa's wildlife resulting from overpopulation, poaching, and sustained subsistence farming, the couple planned a return journey. Fate intruded—Jessica Tandy was diagnosed with cancer. Thirty years after that first safari, and shortly after the death of Jessica Tandy, Hume Cronyn returned to Africa with his daughter Tandy.
The result is "An African Love Story." This special interweaves footage from Cronyn's later trip, the couple's breathtaking footage from 1966, Jessica Tandy's reminiscences—taped shortly before her death—and the couple's reflections on the importance of safeguarding Africa's wildlife. "An African Love Story" is a private meditation on the importance of wilderness. It is also a very human tale of two people, their love for a distant land, and their love for one another.

THE ELEPHANTS OF OPERATION DUMBO DROP

IT WAS ONE THING TO CAST ACTORS of the caliber of Danny Glover, Ray Liotta, Denis Leary, Doug E. Doug, and Corin Nemec for Operation Dumbo Drop. The big problem was finding a suitable leading elephant. Elephant expert Richard Lair scoured Thailand for a pachyderm suited for the role, but Thai elephants worked with mahouts, or handlers, who whispered in the beasts' ears. No go for close-up camera work. Finally Lair turned his attention to the United States and discovered his leading lady, who was named "Tai." Tai was a 26-year-old Asian elephant who weighed in at 4 tons and stood 8 1/2 feet tall. But Lair's job wasn't over—now he had to find elephant doubles for Tai. "I saw over 500 elephants in two months," says

Lair. "Physically, the hardest thing to do was to find elephants of a similar size." And of course that wasn't a real elephant making a parachute drop. Animatronics expert Rick Lazzarini and a crew of 25 worked 11 weeks to create two animatronic elephants for the 10,000 foot jump. Geronimo!

OCEAN GIRL MEETS—OCEAN BOY?

IT'S LIKE PARADISE UP THERE," JEREMY ANGERSON SAYS of the Queensland locales where Ocean Girl is filmed. Angerson joins Ocean Girl for its third season, which premieres on The Disney Channel on Sunday, September 8. "I play Cal," Angerson says. "He's from Neri's planet and lives in a wrecked spaceship." Discovered by Neri, Jason and Brent, Cal must adapt to life on Earth. "At first Cal doesn't understand emotions," Angerson explains. "So part of his story is learning how to experience emotions and how to interact with Neri and humans, which makes him vulnerable." During the filming of Ocean Girl, Angerson experienced wildlife up close and personal, swimming with dolphins. "They're amazing creatures. They swam very close by, looking at me and chattering back and forth." Then there were snakes—poisonous snakes. "Actually a few just swam by upstream," he laughs. "They weren't a problem." Not that the 24-year-old actor was unfamiliar with such conditions. "I'd been to the Amazon," he says "helping to build an eco-tourism lodge. It was quite a fantastic experience: anarchic and primeval."

Ocean Girl fans take note: we have a special marathon on Labor Day with all the episodes from the first season plus Ocean Girl: Her Mission Continues, a movie made from episodes of the second season.

AN ORPHANED LION IS THE STAR OF THE SHINGALANA CHRONICLES

FOUND THAT LIVING IN THE BUSH, I lost track of time completely...even forgetting what day of the month it was." So reflects Gillian Van Houten, who abandoned a modern, hectic life as a television anchor for life on a wilderness preserve in South Africa. "Here things worked to nature's rhythm" Van Houten says. But Gillian Van Houten will never lose track of one memorable summer day—August 23, 1992. While working on an article about elephants, Van Houten received a radio call from her friend John. He had located an abandoned lion cub, a female who had probably never received her first nursing. Thus begin The Shingalana Chronicles, as Van Houten and her friends raise Shingalana (a name meaning "Little Lion") from a dehydrated newborn to a grown lioness. The Shingalana Chronicles form a remarkable story: a story that embraces the beauty and savagery of life in the wild, of life "working to nature's rhythms."

New Episodes! New Day! New Time!—Final Season

AVONLEA—OUR EMMY-WINNING SERIES ENTERS ITS 7th SEASON

IT WAS FULL OF INTERESTING EMOTIONAL MOMENTS," says Gema Zaprognia of the final season of Avonlea. "I think we all felt the show had run a full course, but there were still these emotional pulls. I loved doing Avonlea, yet it also seemed as if I'd been in high school forever." When Avonlea first debuted on The Disney Channel back in 1990, Gemma Zamprognia was 13 years old. Now as Avonlea enters its seventh and final season, her character Felicity King is accepting the news that fiancé Gus Pike has been lost at sea. "Felicity faces a lot of soul-searching in the final season," Zamprognia says. "As she comes to terms with the loss of Gus, she's must also confront her feelings about a new suitor, Stuart McRae. He's a banker who is quite a bit bit older than Felicity. And then the people of Avonlea start a founding home that both Felicity and Stuart are involved in." As for Gema Zamprognia, she's happily "attending university. There is the possibility of a role in a new series," she says, "but at the moment I'm enjoying studying theatre at university."

PREVIEWS OF COMING ATTRACTIONS

COMING UP—THE FALL'S BEST FAMILY ENTERTAINMENT

We've got the best in entertainment for your family this fall, with Disney comedies, animation, and classic adventure. But that's not all—we'll take you behind the scenes of 101 Dalmatians, the new live-action comedy starring Glenn Close as Cruella De Vil. Remember, you can count on a great family movie every night at 7:00 p.m.—seven nights a week!

A KID IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT

For writer/producer Robert Levy, storytelling is also a staple of family life. "I used to paraphrase the classics when I told bedtime stories, and many times I'd make my son the hero." One night, Levy applied his talent to Mark Twain's A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court. "When I finished, I realized it would make a great movie." One note: Prague, Czechoslovakia filled in for Camelot, King Arthur's mythical court.

A GOOFY MOVIE

Starring in his own feature film for the first time, Disney's original "Dippy Dawg" is driven to distraction when he plans to close the generation gap between him and his son Max. It's a contemporary family adventure with six hip songs!

THE MAKING OF 101 DALMATIANS

Warning! This title is not final—but we will take you behind the scenes of the new live-action comedy from producer John Hughes and Walt Disney Pictures! Glenn Close is the delightfully devilish Cruella De Vil, who wants nothing nicer than a warm new coat—made out of Dalmatian puppies!

20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA

Come aboard the Nautilus, commanded by the tormented Captain Nemo, for one of the great movie experiences of all time! (Watch out for that giant squid, not to mention a horde of hungry cannibals!) Nobody does classic adventure better than Disney!
